"Forestry in the Soviet Zone", is an expose of the bad forestry practices being carried on in the Soviet Zone, partly through willful exploitation and partly through lack of knowledge. A number of figures are given on the various types of forests (by area) and on amount of timber cut, damage done by insects, and reserves. The figures apply to the Zone as a whole. There are also numerous examples of the mismanagement of the forests.

The second part, [redacted] entitled "Forest Census in the Soviet Zone", is also without source or date. The census referred to was taken as of 1 April 1949, and most of the figures given refer to that date. The report consists of four pages of text and seven pages of tables. Most of the text is based directly on the tables. The titles of the tables are as follows:

- Forested Areas and Forest Reserves in the Soviet Zone (1937 and 1946)
- Forest Census of 1 April 1949 (areas and reserves; breakdown by type of tree and type of forest)
- Forest Census of 1 April 1949 (areas and reserves; breakdown by type of tree and by Land)
- Forest Census of 1 April 1949 (areas and reserves; breakdown by ~~type~~ Land and by age of trees); there are four tables of this same type, one each for pine, spruce, oak, and beech.
